ACCJ finds Postal Services Privatization Committee opinion recommending approval of Japan Post Bank (JPB) business expansion deeply regrettable

December 18, 2012 – For many years the American Chamber of Commerce in Japan (ACCJ) has urged the Government of Japan to establish a level playing field between Japan Post entities and the private-sector. This position has been raised not only by the ACCJ but also by numerous domestic industry associations. The ACCJ finds it deeply regrettable that the Postal Services Privatization Committee has seen fit to recommend approval of Japan Post Bank (JPB) business expansion despite broad and consistent calls for the establishment of a level playing field.

Allowing Japan Post Bank to offer new or modified products without addressing issues such as JPB's implicit government guarantee and before establishing equivalent conditions of competition is inconsistent with Japan's international trade commitments, including under Article XVII of the World Trade Organization's General Agreement on Trade in Services (GATS).

Furthermore, as the ACCJ has previously stated, failing to establish a level playing field and allowing JPB to expand its presence in the market as a provider of banking services would introduce new risks into the system from a financial soundness perspective. For example, allowing JPB to enter into higher-risk lending areas without a level playing field being in place in advance, will not only harm competition, but also put the assets and capital of JPB at risk. Strict regulatory oversight, risk management, and corporate governance should be assured, in addition to addressing the implicit government guarantee and establishing a level playing field, before any new or modified products or services are permitted.

The ACCJ again urges the Government of Japan to ensure that all conditions of competition are equivalent before permitting Japan Post Bank to expand its business operations.
